CLASSIFIED TRAVEL BRIEFING

Bermuda Triangle (Miami / Key West jump-off)

Start in South Florida. Point your boat at myth. Return with sunscreen.

FIELD RULE
Ocean travel is serious. Use licensed operators, check weather, wear life jackets and file float plans. This guide is entertainment, not a passage plan.

The Bermuda Triangle is a pop-culture wedge of Atlantic roughly between Miami, Bermuda and Puerto Rico. You cannot buy a ticket to the Triangle itself — you launch from real ports. Miami and Key West are the classic U.S. jump-offs: piers, reefs, sunset sails and a century of disappearances that look less spooky once you add "weather" and "old navigation" to the spreadsheet. Still fun to mark the vibes.

Things That Are Weird

- [ ] Miami skyline from Biscayne Bay
- [ ] A boat captain who has a Triangle story ready
- [ ] Compass joke from someone who owns a phone GPS
- [ ] Key West southernmost point photo chaos
- [ ] Sunset that looks like a portal (it's just latitude)
- [ ] Reef snorkel where the only aliens are parrotfish
- [ ] A bar that sells "survived the Triangle" merch
- [ ] Flight over water where you briefly do the math
- [ ] Mention of Flight 19 (1945) from a true-crime podcast brain
- [ ] Perfectly normal cargo ship doing perfectly normal ship things
- [ ] Tropical storm app refresh (responsible paranoia)
- [ ] Key lime something consumed for courage
- [ ] A seagull that knows too much
- [ ] You explained magnetic variation incorrectly but with confidence
- [ ] Dry land afterward — always the goal

Suspicious Spots (public)

Miami / Biscayne Bay waterfront
Public baywalks, piers and licensed boat tours — your mainland staging area.

Key West Mallory Square & harbor
Sunset celebration energy; ferries and charters for legitimate on-water time.

Southernmost Point Buoy (Key West)

Dry Tortugas day trip (ferry / seaplane)
Fort Jefferson out in the Gulf — remote enough to feel Triangle-adjacent without the myth tax.

Nova Southeastern / maritime museums (Miami area)
When you want charts and history instead of vibes.

Agent Notes

• Lloyd's and insurers have long argued the region's loss rates aren't uniquely supernatural once traffic volume is counted — boring, but peer-reviewable.

• Gulf Stream currents and sudden weather explain more than portals. Portals are more Instagrammable.

• If you charter, pick Coast Guard–licensed operators. Ghost stories don't inflate life jackets.

• Puerto Rico and Bermuda are the other corners — this U.S. jump-off guide keeps the packing list shorter.
